Unless specifically instructed by clients, HSBC UK considered the following factors paramount in obtaining best execution (in order of priority):

1. The price of the financial instrument and the costs related to execution were together considered the most important factors in providing best execution.
2. The speed at which HSBC UK was able to execute client orders as this enabled HSBC UK to offer a price representative of the market at the time the order was given.
3. The size of the order, and the overall liquidity of the financial instrument being traded were taken into account to ensure that no unnecessary impact on the price was exerted during execution of the order.
4. Other factors considered were the likelihood of execution and settlement and counterparty risk. Counterparty risk from HSBC Bank plc was considered acceptable for our clients. In addition systems, controls and arrangements within HSBC Bank plc were considered to adequately address execution and settlement risk.
