The HSBC Next Generation event was really exciting for me because it's all about pushing the boundaries and make impossible, almost possible and that kind of re-imagination of the new world.

We are living in a very transformational time and it means the convergence of technology, the science, the computing and the possibilities of mobile phones has enabled us as a company to be able to transform an industry.

Entrepreneurship, it's all about pushing yourself. When you run, you're really pushing yourself or when you do any heavy exercise.

And of course, it's painful at some point in your running when you're like really tired. You almost feel you're dying, but that is a good pain.

And it really important to remember that when you are in tough problems within your work life looks doom and gloom, really know that this is actually you're pushing yourself and something great is being shaped.

The people that I work the closest with, they are almost like my family. We've been working for ten years. Every day they change me.

Every day they have a very big impact on my life personally, but also in the journey of the company.

And it's really, really important, always to remember we are where we are, not because of us, but because of everyone around us.
