

Video TranscriptSharon Kobler video

It's not easy to be an entrepreneur, especially a successful one.

To have that resilient and patience and optimistic even – is very important.

And that to me, that's all the characters that comes down to being grit. I was a professional athlete for ten years, actually.

The things that the coach repeats to me everyday to me is that you better always prepare yourself to be ready.

Ready to take on any competition that happens even just in the next minute.

Because if you miss that opportunity that will be the biggest regret in your life to miss something for whatever reason there is.

We already have a lot of resources compared to a first round entrepreneur, and if we're stepping up on somebody's shoulder, don't even think about it because the biggest loss that you will ever have is the opportunity cost.

Jump in when you get a chance.